TEMPERING ANGER WITH FAMILY ADVOCACY CLASS

Anger may be a sign that it needs to be addressed before it can affect an Airman's career. Luckily, the Family Advocacy Center is available to help.

Senior Airman Stefan Stephenson-Shipp, 19th Maintenance Squadron fuel systems journeyman, enters a C-130J dry bay Aug. 8 at Little Rock Air Force Base. The fuel systems team works 24 hours to inspect and repair the 19th Airlift Wing's C-130J fleet. Without these specialists, the C-130J wouldn't get off the ground to deliver critical cargo and support across the globe, making fuels systems a key component to fueling the fight.

Fumbling through the ins and outs of an aircraft, your fingers trace the different mechanisms of a C-130J. Everything is blurred, yet you are required to fix a broken unit. You have 10 minutes to complete this task. Would reduced sight prevent you from completing the mission?

The 19th Medical Group Optometry Clinic ensures Airmen at Little Rock Air Force base are visually fit to fight by providing annual eye exams, pre-operation and post operation eye care, and diagnosing and treating eye infections.

“The mission of the optometry clinic is to make sure Airmen, retirees and dependents can see, but it’s goes beyond glasses and contact lenses,” said Maj. Felicia Rinken, 19th Medical Group optometrist “It’s about the health of the eye. If the body is healthy, the eye is healthy.”

Annual eye appointments do more than keep prescriptions up to date.

“Vision exams include a complete comprehensive picture” Rinken said. “From an examination we can tell if you have diabetes, high blood pressure, untreated STDs, any inflammation or eye diseases. Let’s say you’re diabetic and you don’t know it. It would be very detrimental for us to deploy someone who doesn’t know they have diabetes. We can take care of it here before they go.”

In 2016, the optometry clinic served approximately 3,000 Airmen, retirees and dependents with a 4-man team of U.S. Air Force personnel and civilians.

“Everyone is encouraged to make an appointment,” Rinken said. “If you are over the age of 21 and are young and healthy, you should be having an eye exam once every two years, even if you don’t wear glasses. If you wear contact lenses, glasses or are over the age of 50 you should be coming in every single year.”

Active-duty members who wear glasses or contact lenses are required to have two pairs of prescription glasses and gas mask inserts.

“If you are short tasked to deploy, leave in two weeks and do not have glasses or gas mask inserts, that doesn’t give us the amount of time we need to order glasses and gas mask inserts,” Rinken said.

Brennan Schilperoort has his eye inspected by Maj. Felicia Rinken, 19th Medical Group optometrist, on July 24 at the 19th Medical Group optometry clinic on Little Rock Air Force Base. The optometry clinic ensures Airmen at Little Rock Air Force base are visually fit to fight by providing annual eye exams, pre-operation and post operation eye care, and diagnosing and treating eye infections.

In addition to eye exams, the optometry clinic offers referrals for refractive surgery.

Refractive surgery is eye surgery used to improve the state of the eye and decrease or eliminate dependency on glasses or contact lenses.

“To have refractive surgery, you must be active duty, 21 years or older, have a stable prescription for 12 months and commanders approval,” Rinken said.

COMBAT AIRLIFTER

Legal office

Providing care, assistance

By Airman 1st Class Grace Nichols
19th Airlift Wing Public Affairs

As stewards of the military justice system, the 19th Airlift Wing Legal Office at Little Rock Air Force Base assists commanders in maintaining good order and discipline in their units.

Although “JA” stands for Judge Advocate, its unofficial meaning in the legal office is “just ask.”

“The difference between the legal office and civilian attorneys is that we do everything,” said Capt. Alexander Zoll, 19th AW Legal Office chief of adverse actions. “We advise commanders and take care of Airmen; we’re advisors and prosecutors and we also provide legal assistance. You’re not going to get that anywhere else.”

The Military Justice Division is also responsible for processing all courts-martial, Articles 15s and administrative disciplinary matters.

The staff is equipped for more than disciplinary actions; Airmen with a wealth of knowledge in all things legal help service members and their families with a variety of issues, offering many services for free.

“We take care of Airmen and families and support the Combat Airlift mission by providing legal counsel,” said Airman 1st Class Pete Davis, 19th AW Legal Office military justice paralegal.

The Airmen are knowledgeable in paralegal matters, powers of attorney and notary services, last will and testaments and more.

Active-duty, reserve, guard, retirees and service members’ dependents are welcome, even if the individual is unsure of the type of legal assistance needed.

“If we can’t help you, we’ll direct you to someone who can,” Zoll said.

The paralegals provide support to family members with matters regarding questions about finances, power of attorney and other issues while their service member is deployed.

“Just because their family member is deployed doesn’t mean resources aren’t available to them,” Zoll said. “We’ll listen and make sure they have what they need.”

The legal office doesn’t represent members in court and cannot assist in criminal cases. Those seeking help in these matters may go to the Area Defense Council.

Appointments can be made in person or over the phone. Walk-ins are available for some services.

For more information, contact the 19th AW Legal Office at 501-987-7886.

Tempering anger with Family Advocacy class

By Airman Rhett Isbell

19th Airlift Wing Public Affairs

A kettle sits on a stove top. Wisps of steam slowly escape the spout, producing a low-pitched hiss. Suddenly, steam starts billowing out and all that can be heard is a whistle as the water in the kettle has reached a boiling point.

Feeling this way because of anger may be a sign that it needs to be addressed before it can affect an Airman's career. Luckily, the Family Advocacy Center on base is available to help.

"Anger Management is not a place of judgement," said Lillie Tarver, 19th Medical Operations Squadron family advocacy outreach manager. "I want people to realize that the class is a place of education and self-exploration."

A common misconception is that the class is meant for people who have already gotten in trouble. The true purpose of the class is to educate people about their anger and how to manage it properly before it becomes a problem.

The classes, offered to Team Little Rock members are held quarterly in two lessons. The classes are held a week apart to allow students time to use the knowledge and tools they were given in the first session.

"It's about understanding your emotions and being able to make more value driven decisions," said Staff Sgt. Leah Chhoeun, 19th MDOS alcohol and drug abuse prevention and treatment non-commissioned officer in charge. "It's about being able to get a lot out of it and apply it."

The classes are taught in a group setting to educate students on how to determine what their specific prompts are, as well as figuring out how to properly deal with and direct their anger.

"I really enjoy watching the participants have these 'moments of truth' when learning to deal with their anger," Tarver said. "Seeing them realize what triggers their anger and how it affects other people helps them learn more effectively."

For more information or to sign-up for a class, call 501-987-7377.

New AF Space Operations Directorate achieves operating capability

WASHINGTON — The Air Force selected the senior civilian and mobilization assistant for the deputy chief of staff for Space Operations directorate, or “AF/A11,” on Aug. 17. Mr. Shawn Barnes will serve as the assistant deputy chief of staff for Space Operations, and Maj. Gen. Pamela Lincoln has been named as the Mobilization assistant to the deputy chief of staff for Space Operations.

“Mr. Barnes and Maj. Gen. Lincoln are experienced leaders who will provide the vision and direction for our new Space Operations Directorate,” said Secretary of the Air Force Heather Wilson. “This is one more element of the plan to ensure our space forces are organized, trained, and equipped to prevail in any conflict.”

The initial cadre of the A11 has been identified and assigned, consisting of 43 military members, government civilians, and contractors. These professionals have formed the core of the organization and will begin initial operating capability Aug. 21. The A11 will be a strong and vocal advocate for space capabilities inside the Air Force and with our national security, commercial, and international partners.

“The A11 will be key to ensuring we link combatant commander and service space requirements with our capabilities,” said Air Force Chief of Staff Gen. David L. Goldfein, the joint chief most responsible for military space forces. “We must ensure our space forces have the tools necessary to operate in any environment, defend our systems, and provide our joint force with vital space capabilities to remain the most responsive, agile and lethal on the planet.”

This is one of several key initiatives

the Air Force is pursuing to adapt its operations, processes and organizational structure to reflect the reality that space is a warfighting domain. To outpace emerging threats, the Air Force is also instituting a new space warfighting concept of operations, changing its space force training model, streamlining its acquisition processes, and designing more resilient and survivable space systems.

Principal defense space advisor role continues, supported by joint personnel At the Defense Department level, the secretary of the Air Force will continue to serve as the principal space advisor to the secretary of Defense over the next year, giving the Air Force and DOD leadership time to revalidate the current approach. As the principal advisor, Wilson has responsibilities to guide and advocate for space-related programs across all services and defense agencies. A staff comprised of joint personnel, to include Army and Navy representatives, will support her in this role and assist her in addressing each services’ space operations, acquisitions and space-related equities.

“While we are integrating and normalizing space on the Air Staff, we are also strengthening the integrated service staff supporting the principal DOD space advisor role so that major issues are addressed, operations and acquisition is streamlined and every service is heard when it comes to space,” said Wilson in a June 16 press release regarding her PDSA role.
